CALIFORNIA PRETRIAL TRAINING

This monthly six-part training series in partnership with Advancing Pretrial Policy and Research (APPR) is designed for probation officers, superior court staff, judicial officers, and other pretrial service providers who are focused on the delivery of pretrial services. Each month, the virtual training will be held from 12pm to 2pm PST.

STC Credits: 2 Hours for each Module
Cost - $60 per Module

Module Descriptions and Webinars Dates

Module 1: Introduction to Pretrial - June 22, 2022:

This course will provide foundational knowledge about pretrial services, and it will lay the groundwork for future, more in-depth training sessions. This course will cover the roles pretrial services may play throughout the pretrial phase, the legal and evidence-based principles underlying the pretrial phase and the provision of pretrial services, issues of racial equity within pretrial services, and the key distinctions between probation supervision and pretrial services.

Module 2: Before Arraignment - July 27, 2022

This course will review the role that a pretrial services program may play during the pre-arraignment time period. Participants will learn about how pretrial services may provide information to help judicial officers make the pre-arraignment release decisions. The session will also cover the basics on pretrial risk assessment tools, an overview of the most commonly used tools, the role of the assessor, and the importance of quality assurance. Faculty will also address the needs and ways to assess a person's ability to meet a financial release condition.

Module 3: Arraignment Hearing - August 17, 2022

This course will review the role that a pretrial services program may play during the arraignment hearing. Faculty will review the legal principles of a meaningful arraignment and the importance of the pretrial assessment report that a pretrial services officer may provide to the court and other stakeholders. The course will also discuss the value of pretrial services attending the court hearing. Finally, faculty will present on the distinction between court-ordered release conditions and voluntary services.

Module 4: Pretrial Support, Part 1 - September 14, 2022

The training will review the evidence-based and practical ways a pretrial services program can promote people's pretrial success. The methods discussed in the training honor the presumption of innocence, the requirement of "least restrictive means," and the principle of human dignity. In doing so, the focus of supervision shifts from managing failure to promoting success. Faculty will cover in detail the research on pretrial strategies (such as court notification, supervision, and electronic monitoring). And the material will include best practices on assessing needs, the frequency and intensity of contacts, and how to respond to both compliant and non-compliant behavior.

Module 5: Pretrial Support, Part II (Supportive Services) - October 19, 2022

Justice system and community partners increasingly recognize that most people released pretrial appear for their court hearings and remain law-abiding. Accordingly, many pretrial services agencies have wisely shifted their supervision model to prioritize and focus on supportive services rather than surveillance. This training will provide participants with evidence-based and practical ways to support people with need-based services. It will focus on person-focused supervision and discuss ways to engage the community and obtain feedback from clients. The course will also cover using a collaborative approach to review the detained population.

Module 6: Measuring Performance - November 9, 2022

Performance measures enable justice agencies to more objectively understand and evaluate the extent to which important pretrial goals, such as fairness, effectiveness, and efficiency, are being achieved. Common pretrial performance measures include, for example, a jurisdiction's release rate, arrest-free rate, and court appearance rate. Benefits of good performance measures include evaluating the effectiveness of new practices, tracking changes over time, and communicating with all stakeholders, including the public and media. This course is designed to assist participants with increasing their capacity to use local data to better understand and improve their pretrial system. The course will also cover the importance of quality assurance and strategies to build sustainability using continuous learning and onboarding new staff.
